

1849 - June 1854

At the time of the great gold rush to California in 1849, Berford & Company, a co-partnership composed of Richard George Berford and Loring L. Lombard were in business at No. 2 Astor House, New York City, as news-dealers and book publishers; the partners saw an opportunity for the establishment of a good business in forwarding letters, news matter and express packages to the thousands of men going to the Pacific Coast.

In the Fall of 1849, Mr. Lombard left for the West by way of Panama, and established agencies in the West Indies, the Western Coast of South America, Panama, Ports on the Pacific Coast, Hawaii and the East; he returned to New York in the Spring of 1851 and then had prepared the stamps hereafter listed.

The routes of the Company were largely by water, they claiming that the United States had no exclusive jurisdiction, as such routes were not Post routes or routes within the meaning of the statute. The partners pushed their enterprise extensively but were badly hurt by the reduction of the Government Postal Rates in 1851; this regulation of the Post Office Department went into effect June 10, 1851, under an Act of Congress approved March 3rd of that year.

The original circular letter of the Company, issued under date of March, 1851, states that special messengers would leave New York by steamer on the 13th and 28th of each month; that letters would be delivered to various points in California at rates therein mentioned. In April, a month later, another circular was issued by the Company reducing rates. On June 16, 1851, they advertised new postage rates to meet the reduction made by the Government in its postal charges, as outlined in its circular of June 10, 1851. This last advertisement of the Company follows:
